

Grinder's Switch Winery Story

A self-proclaimed "hobby out of control", Grinder's Switch Winery has been growing and producing award-winning wine for over a decade. Grinder's Switch Winery is owned by Joey and Gail Chessor, a small-town couple who turned their dream into a reality and a thriving family business.

The winery is located in the heart of middle Tennessee, in the rolling countryside of Hickman County. The Chessor family nurtures a 10 acre vineyard, and produces more than 15,000 gallons of wine each year on their family estate.

The hand-built log cabin that was once their family home has been converted into a cozy tasting room that welcomes visitors far and wide. It has become the symbol of the winery's philosophy for providing Southern charm and sophisticated taste.

In the Spring of 2015, Grinder's Switch Winery took their wine to the heart of the big city and opened a location in downtown Nashville in the historic Marathon Village. This satellite location provides customers new and old a chance to enjoy some of Tennessee's best wine more often.

What does Grinder's Switch mean?

Grinder's Switch is an area located in Centerville, TN and is little more than a "switch" in the railroad. Grinder's Switch became famous when Minnie Pearl (Centerville's most famous native) told her stories about the colorful characters of the small town of Grinder's Switch in her comedy skits for the Grand Ole Opry and Hee-Haw. Since then, Grinder's Switch has been immortalized in countless songs and stories.
